IMDb is the most important database in Spanish on cinema in the world, comes from the acronym Internet Movie Database, and contains the largest ratio of information on movies, series and video games in the world. Their website is one of the most popular to be consulted and you find it available in 6 different languages: English, French, Italian, Portuguese, Spanish and German.

IMDb was created by Col Needham in 1990 and eight years later it became part of Amazon with the aim of being used to advertise its DVDs, since then it has not stopped increasing its library.

As published on its own website, more than 200 million users visit it monthly, its database collects data from more than 3 million audiovisual projects and more than 6 million interpreters and production equipment. Now, IMDb is the definitive application for lovers of the seventh art, since everything you want or need to know will find it.

In addition to all this information, using it you will know the box office that is there every week, future releases and see the programming of specific television channels, this point depends on the availability you have in your city.

An interesting thing about IMDb is that you can see the personal rating that users give to the movies they have seen, you find them broken down by gender and age, and know the preferences based on these figures. These evaluations will help us when choosing the one that we most want to see.

You can enter the application without having to register, but having an IMDb account can be very useful, since there are a number of advantages that you can enjoy. You can do it through an email, a Google account or through your Facebook profile. In any case, the app is free and you can find it available for Android, Apple and Kindle Fire.

From the IMDb application itself, with your personal account you can also create your own lists of your favorite audiovisual content, we can vote, comment on their forum and, ultimately, be part of their active community.

With a very intuitive interface, the IMDb app is divided into three categories: the main page, movies and TV. Also on the front page we find a magnifying glass in a considerable size so that you can directly search for what you need without having to do it manually by browsing it.

In the first place, IMDb will show us the latest news in the cinephile scene, if you click on each of the images you will be able to read all the available information about what you have chosen. It is a very easy way to enter the exact product you want to know, by putting the cover you already know what you are looking for and it is not misleading. A section that distinguishes it from the others is that of actors, it offers us everything we want to know about interpreters from all over the world with a single click, known or not so well known.

Below we will find the section Coming Soon, where we can see the posters of the upcoming releases, also, if you click on them you will see all the updated information they have at all times.

The IMDb application in its Movies section shows you ordered by their titles the most wanted and then a classification in categories ranging from the highest grossing to the most awarded, etc. In its Billboard section you will see the upcoming releases with all the information you need: hours, cinemas where you can see them, prices, etc., all based on your area. You can base on your GPS locator or adding your zip code.

The last option that we can choose in the IMDb application is the one dedicated to television products. Here you will also have everything you need to know about your favorite small screen shows, in the same format as your older sisters movies. It is very focused on what the North American public consumes the most, with the first two sections dedicated exclusively to them, but in their forums you can find other series.

From IMDb you can share everything you want from its content on your social networks or other applications on your device, and create alert lists so you don't miss any news that happens.
